Augusta Savage Gallery at the University of Massachusetts Amherst presents an exhibition of film and photography by Liane Brandon and Holly Fisher entitled POWER/PLAY from November 3-21, 2014 with an Opening Reception on November 3 from 5-7pm. The artists will be in attendance.

The artists will each give a talk accompanied by film viewings:
Liane Brandon – November 12, 7pm
Holly Fisher – November 13, 7pm

POWER/PLAY is an installation of film and photographic images that matches two veteran artists with widely differing sensibilities. From Liane Brandon’s documentation of women powerlifters to Holly Fisher’s improvisatory visual essays, we enter the worlds of artists with tremendous vision and an impressive range of experiences.

Liane Brandon, having recently joined a gym, became interested in the women powerlifters who were training. Ranging in age from 27 to 60 years old, they seemed to defy all physical and cultural assumptions. Brandon has created astounding images that convey both the physical nature of the sport while evoking the spirit of these women.

Holly Fisher’s thin tank is a 16 minute video, looped for installation with audio headsets for the viewer. A visual discourse on language and surveillance, a goldfish filmed in a Chinese restaurant in Berlin is transformed within 24 layers of video into an encounter between Chinese philosopher Chuang Tzu and the 21st century darkarts of spy-craft. It all takes shape via multiple layering of a string quartet by composer Lois V Vierk. Fisher will also exhibit still images from her various film projects.

GALLERY TALKS

November 12, 7pm

Liane Brandon will show her classic short film Betty Tells Her Story (1972), one of the first independent films that dealt with women’s body image, and contrast it with her current series of striking photographs of women powerlifters. She will also show examples of her wide-ranging still photography - which runs the gamut from wildlife, jazz musicians, artists, writers, to television productions including PBS’ American Experience, Nova, and American Masters - and tell the stories behind them.
November 13, 7pm

Holly Fisher will screen a part of her film, Everywhere at Once as a frame for discussing around how the palimpsest, visible in her digital still work, seen in this exhibition, is also at play within the cyclical structuring strategies that underpin her long-form essay films. Clips from her prior works will also be on view throughout the exhibition.

ABOUT THE ARTISTS

Liane Brandon’s diverse careers include political activist, stunt woman, ski instructor and educator. She is an award-winning independent filmmaker, photographer and University of Massachusetts/Amherst Professor Emeritus. As a photographer, Brandon has documented wildlife, jazz musicians, artists, writers, Cape Verdean longshoremen, political events, powerlifters and film and television productions. Her still photography credits include Murder at Harvard (PBS American Experience), Typhoid Mary: The Most Dangerous Woman In America (PBS Nova), Unsolved Mysteries, The Powder & the Glory, and Louisa May Alcott: The Woman Behind Little Women (PBS American Masters). Her photos have been published in The New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, the Boston Globe, New York Daily News and many other publications, as well as featured in gallery exhibits.

Her classic films Anything You Want To Be (1971) and Betty Tells Her Story (1972) were among the earliest and most frequently used consciousness-raising tools of the Women’s Movement. Her films have won numerous national and international awards, and have been featured on HBO, USA Cable, TLC and Cinemax. They have twice received Blue Ribbons at the American Film Festival, and have been presented at the Museum of Modern Art, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, the Whitney Museum of American Art, the Chicago Art Institute and the Tribeca Film Festival. As Professor at the University of Massachusetts, Brandon taught film and education courses, was the head of the Educational Technology Program at the College of Education and was the Director of UMass Educational Television which produced award winning, original educational programming for cable/home audiences throughout New England.

Holly Fisher has been active since the mid-sixties as an independent filmmaker, teacher, and editor of documentaries, including the 1989 Academy Award Nominee Who Killed Vincent Chin? Her work as director, filmmaker, and editor have been screened in museums and film festivals worldwide, including The Museum of Modern Art, two Whitney Museum Biennials, Tribeca Film Festival, and Centre Pompidou.

Fisher’s films are open-ended essays, fusing linear narrative with non-linear and increasingly layered and cyclic structures. Her first feature Bullets for Breakfast received “Best Experimental Film” at the Ann Arbor Film Festival, 1992. With an on-going interest in human rights, perception, and media, Fisher followed with three more long-form essay films: first is Everywhere at Once with Jeanne Morau, and in collaboration with photographer Peter Lindbergh. Next was Deafening Silence, in which Fisher travels to Burma's eastern frontier, on foot and under-cover with guerrilla soldiers, to document life in a village of internally displaced ethnic Karen people. A Question of Sunlight concerns the formation of memory, and links 9/11 with the holocaust via 'the telling of memories' by NYC artist José Urbach, who was witness to both.
